Committee to Defend the President Slams Joe Biden’s Racist History With New Ad Campaign

Launching today, $500,000 ad campaign exposes support for segregationists, use of “N” word, and more

Alexandria, VA — Today, the Committee to Defend the President—one of America’s largest pro-Trump super PACs—announced the release of a new advertisement, titled “It’s Joe Biden.” The ad criticizes Biden for his long history of racism, including the endorsement of segregationists, support for mass incarceration, use of the “N” word, and more. As the narrator explains, “Black lives do matter, but one presidential candidate disagrees.”

The ad can be seen here.

The Committee will spend more than $500,000 to run the ad nationally on Fox News Channel, statewide on North Carolina’s cable and broadcast stations, and on social media platforms across the country. It will be shown for at least one week, beginning today. The “It’s Joe Biden” ad comes on the heels of the Committee’s $400,000 “Lost His Mind” ad campaign, which suggested that Biden is suffering from dementia.

“The worst possible candidate for the Black community is Joe Biden, who has a long history of spewing racist rhetoric and promoting racist policies,” said Committee Chairman Ted Harvey. “From supporting segregationists to using the ‘N’ word, Biden’s 40-year record has repeatedly failed African-Americans who have foolishly put their faith in him. On the other hand, President Trump has proven in just four short years that Black lives truly do matter.”
